

16 – THE CATTLE MARKET

Samantha and I were kneeling sideways on, on all fours, in a shaded cage in on Achmed's raised display platform in the middle of the noisy open-air cattle market.

It was indeed a busy scene. Real live cows and sheep were being displayed in pens. Tethered camels were snorting. Horses were being run and up down the sandy ground to display their paces and so, too, were some dark haired white women who, like us, wore immobilising gloves which were attached to the sides of their belts. I saw that they, too, were all nose ringed – which gave them, like us, an animal-like look.

In a well-attended corner of the market were male animals whose fertilising services were apparently being offered for hire as bulls, rams, stallion horses and stallion dogs – and, I saw, the naked figure our young boy, the son of the beautiful mother.

The hinged front bars of the cages of Achmed's women had been lifted up to show us off better. Samantha and I were facing away from each other with our bottoms almost touching.

Our heads were held up and back by our nose rings, which were fastened to rings in the top of the low cage and our ankles were fastened to the rings in the floor. We could hardly move. It was a position that made us arch our backs and thrust forward our breasts that hung down between our arms.

The rest of our party were similarly being displayed kneeling on all fours in other open fronted cages stalls on Achmed's platform.

Numerous other white women, all dark haired, were being similarly displayed on other shaded raised platforms by other slave dealers. They all seemed to have been muted, like us. Again, like us, the hands of all of the white women were also encased in immobilising gloves, which were attached to the sides of their belts or straps round their thighs, rendering them as helpless as cattle. The bodies were still very white despite the hot sun. Evidently, I thought their Masters liked to preserve their skins white and kept them out the sun.

Shocked, I saw that irrespective of their age, the women were nearly all either pregnant or in milk. Like us, they were being treated like animals and all seemed to have mated. The atmosphere seemed to be more like that of a public cattle market than a discreet slave market.

Numerous richly dressed Arabs were strolling round in front of the various display platforms, chatting and laughing and occasionally pointing to a particular white woman. Clearly, we blond girls were the centre of attraction.

Standing in front of our platform, one of Achmed's eunuchs was calling out our attractions. I did understand what he was saying but I could imagine that he was drawing attention to our blond hair and blue eyes – and, in the case of Samantha and I, that we were married women, available to be leased out for several months. This he would doubtlessly be saying would still give time for a rather special maternity that would still pander to an Arab's natural desire to degrade and humiliate a Christian woman, especially a married one, by using her for forced breeding.

How awful to be talked about in this way – as if we really were animals.

Many buyers came and looked at us, especially at Samantha and me and at the beautiful mother and daughter. Evidently questioning the eunuchs about
