SHORT ANSWER

- Anatomy is the study of the internal and external structures and the physical relationship between body organs or systems. Anatomy can be studied broadly at the gross anatomy level, or locally can be divided into regional or systemic anatomy. Each level looks at the physical structure of the organ and its relationship to other organs within the same system or different systems.
Physiology is the study of how living organisms perform their vital functions. Human physiology is the study of the function of the human body. Physiology can be broken down into more specific areas of physiologic functions to include cell physiology or even cardiovascular physiology.

- Correct answers may include the following:
Homeostasis refers to a stable internal environment inside the body. The body will modify physiologic systems to help maintain homeostasis. If the temperature begins to fall, the blood flow to the skin and extremities decreases. The sweat gland activity also decreases. If this response does not cause the internal temperature to rise, the skeletal muscle will begin to shiver to help increase the core body temperature. Once the internal core temperature begins to rise, the muscle stops generating heat through shivering, the blood flow to the skin and extremities increases, and sweat gland activity returns to normal.
- The 10-year-old female patient has swelling on the lateral side of her right ankle with swelling also found on the medial side of the right lower leg proximal to the ankle.
