Catholic high schools in the United States have been undergoing three major changes in recent years: the shift to lay leadership, a national culture that has become deeply consumerist and pluralist, and a more ethnically diverse student body. James Heft explains how these changes can be successfully navigated by teachers, administrations, and parents.

James L. Heft's new book, Catholic High Schools: Facing the New Realities, tries to continue a tradition of probing the theoretical good of Catholic education in this country. He situates his book in the tradition of Bryk, Lee, and Holland's (1993) seminal work Catholic Schools and the Common Good, looking for how structural benefits of Catholic schools lead to positive civic outcomes. Heft attempts in his monograph to make three basic points about the state of Catholic education ...
