Since the second edition of CIBSE Guide G was published, various amendments to the Building Regulations, British Standards and the introduction of new codes have heavily influenced the content of this new edition. In particular, the emphasis on water conservation and sustainability has had an impact on many chapters, as well as resulted in the Guide being reformatted. The British Standard relating to both building and site drainage and water services has been updated and superseded by a BS ...

The data on water consumption in the world is provided by the United Nations (UN, UNESCO, and FAO, see list of publications below). Worldwide, agriculture accounts for 70% of all water consumption, compared to 20% for industry and 10% for domestic use. In industrialized nations, however, industries consume more than half of the water available for human use. Belgium, for example, uses 80% of ...

However, the hotel was using - on average across the measured period - 55% less water than the predicted daily consumption using standard calculations. Actual maximum flow rates through the domestic water booster pump were 40% below the maximum theoretical demand when using BS EN806 Guide 2006. As a result, the existing cold-water storage tank takes more than two days to go through an ...

There is evidence that using this method overestimates the design load, which leads to over-designed water-supply systems and results in larger capital costs, as well as higher energy consumption. In addition, oversized pipework can cause lower-than-anticipated water velocities, resulting in unnecessary heat gain in cold-water pipes and heat losses in hot-water pipes.
